DANIEL GBENGA ORIMOLOYE - MARCH 2014 EXHIBITION

When Daniel Gbenga Orimoloye first introduced himself to The Saffron Walden Gallery it was hard to see the artistic determination and passion which lies beneath the surface of this quiet, humble, man. It was only when we had the opportunity to view Daniel’s work that we realised we were dealing with a rare talent.

Daniel derives his artistic inspiration from a wide variety of sources and has a wide repertoire of subject matter. There are the wonderfully atmospheric, traditional Nigerian scenes in which the ambience of the essential fabric of the nation is captured in bright colours and texture.

Daniel paints in thick oils in the impasto style which makes his work instantly recognisable and forges a strong link to his more recent work of Saffron Walden and Cambridge which, although poles apart in terms of subject from Nigeria, still allow Daniel’s skill and creativity to shine through.

The Saffron Walden series of paintings are particularly interesting as they capture a traditional English town in a contemporary setting, often including 21st century urban features that other artists may sacrifice to produce a more quaint image. It is Daniel’s ability to reproduce views with great colour, perspective and texture which can turn the apparently mundane into a transfixing and compelling visual treat.

Daniel’s interpretation of light and colour is possibly at its most dramatic in his portrait and figure painting when light is used to model forms often with a very strong background colour such as red or green, then a few brief strokes of colour from the palette knife bring the subject to life and demand and hold one's attention. Bright colours juxtaposed often out of context but ultimately incredibly effective and quite natural.

Daniel has now found inspiration in the English countryside and will no doubt bring his unique interpretation and painterly style to this new subject. The results will almost certainly be dramatic and incredibly exciting and we, at The Saffron Walden Gallery, are delighted to be able to introduce this new direction to what is already an outstanding body of work.

One of Daniel's earlier exhibitions was called Ona, meaning road or way in Yoruba. Roads and rivers do feature consistently in Daniel's work perhaps symbolic of the journey he is on as an artist. We feel privileged to be accompanying him along his road. Daniel already has a long, prodigious and distinguished history as an artist and we, at The Saffron Walden Gallery feel very excited to have become part of the journey.

As an artist I am fascinated by mankind's inherent transient nature, along with realities which can stand as allegories of life. This perhaps best explains the figurative and narrative that is often prominent in my work.

Born and raised in Nigeria, and residing in the U.K, I feel blessed to have two very rich, distinct, and in some instances, very different cultures to draw from. A vibrant multi-heritage finding its way into my art, figuratively or narratively.

My medium of choice is oil, but I occasionally make use of watercolour, gouache, acrylic and, for sculpture, modelling clay. My method, I believe, is as painterly as it gets; piling on the paint nice and thick. I do not like to get bogged down rendering minute detail in my work. Of greater importance to me, is for the movement and manner of my hand to be apparent to the viewer; for the strokes, texture and the feeling of the thickness of paint to come across. Eventually the viewer must then retreat from the work in order to see it all come together. From this point onwards, what is grasped visually is then up to the viewer based on their context and location.

I use colours and tonal variations in creating tensions between opposites, abstract and realistic insertions in order to dramatise visual and focal impact. My metaphors are encapsulated more in my titles than in my colours.

I have preferred and worked predominantly with the palette knife instead of the brush since the very early nineteen nineties. My preoccupation with this way of applying paint has grown to include the use of a stripping knife. Its rather broad flat tip lends itself nicely to my present creative temperament and how I like to work. I sometimes use it interchangeably with a bonafide palette knife.
